Station 1: genre

Hip hop lyrics are more important for society than Pop lyrics.

When you only like a certain type of music, you are put in a box by others.

There are no pure music genres as each type of music always has aspects of other genres.

People who listen to all kinds of music are open-minded.

No matter how you feel, every genre has at least one song that explains it well.

There is a genre for everyone.

Station 2: lyrics

A really good song has to have rhymes in it.

Song lyrics can teach us more about language use.

Only songs about love are very successful.

Nowadays, song texts are only about drugs and alcohol.

Is it okay to use taboo words like f in song lyrics?

Should song lyrics that are against homosexuals be banned?

Station 3: celebrities

Just because a singer is very popular doesn't mean he or she is very good.

You can only become famous if you are good-looking.

Music celebrities shouldn't go into politics.

Marriage between two music celebrities never works.

Having a celebrity crush sets unreachable standards for your (potential) partner.

Music celebrities should not try to be actors.

Station 4: concerts & music platforms

Popstars cannot quite put on a show like their heavy metal counterparts.

All concerts should be streamable online.

Because of Spotify and YouTube, nobody listens to the radio anymore.

No artist is ever as good as his or her recorded voice when singing live on stage.

You have only lived a good life if you attended at least five concerts.

At a concert, you should really experience the moment rather than record each song with your smartphone.

Station 5: music award shows

Music awards are given to the most popular rather than to the best artists.

Music award shows don't present anything new anymore.

American award shows are more important than the ones in Europe.

Awards should be given to artists who have been streamed the most on online music platforms.

Award shows are overrated and don't say anything about musical talent.

Awards shouldn't be presented by celebrities – one of the artist's fans should be doing that.
